OUR CONTRIBUTORS

Mr. Clapp is a consulting geologist specializing in petroleum. From 1902 to 1908 he was connected with the U. S. Geological Survey. In 1914, in association with others, he was engaged in the geological investigation of northern China on which he made the observations recounted in the present article. Among recent papers of his are: "The Ethics of the Petroleum Geologist" (Econ. Geol., Vol. 12, 1917) and "A Review of Present Knowledge Regarding the Petroleum Resources of South America" (Amer. Inst. Mining Engineers Bull. No. 130, 1917).

Dr. Shelford of the University of Illinois and the Illinois State Laboratory of Natural History is an animal ecologist. Besides a book entitled "Animal Communities in Temperate America," published by the Geographic Society of Chicago in 1913, he has published numerous articles on animal societies in relation to their habitat.

Dr. Grabau was until recently professor of paleontology at Columbia University. He has specialized in the historical geology of eastern North America. Among his numerous publications may be mentioned: "Principles of Stratigraphy" (New York, 1913) and two papers on the geological history of Niagara Falls (New York State Museum Bull. No. 45, 1901, and Bull. Amer. Geogr. Soc., 1901).

Professor Day is professor of economic history at Yale University. In 1918-19 he was a member of the American delegation to the peace conference as specialist on Balkan affairs. He has written "The Policy and Administration of the Dutch in Java" (New York, 1904) and "A History of Commerce" (New York, 1907).

Professor Williams, of the University of California, gained his intimate knowledge of China from more than thirty years of contact with Chinese affairs as a resident missionary and in the consular and diplomatic service. In 1918-19 he was a member of the American delegation at the peace conference as a specialist on China.

Mr. Babcock is a lawyer and author, of Washington, D. C., who has devoted himself to the history of early cartography and geography. The present article is the seventh in a series in the Review dealing with the mythical islands of the Atlantic on medieval maps.

Professor Ward of Harvard University is one of the foremost authorities on climate in this country. The present article is the fifth in a series appearing in the Bulletin and Review of the Society on various aspects of the climatology of the United States.
